Greeley, Colorado
CSU Extension Classroom

Training Session

Tuesday May 6, 2008

Dairy Safety: Cow Sense, Chemicals and Machinery:

Recognizing work-related hazards is essential for area managers on dairy operations, not only to prevent near misses and accidents, but also to educate workers under their supervision. In addition to discussing the chemical and machinery hazards found on dairies, information on animal behavior and handling will be presented as it is vital to the safety and efficiency of all workers on the dairy farm. We will share with attendees the latest statistics for injuries on Colorado livestock operations and discuss the connection between education, animal handling, work-related injuries, and health of dairy operations.

Preparing for the Dairy Inspection

We will discuss, item by item, the dairy farm inspection process in an effort to help key dairy personnel become aware of the reasons for the dairy inspection. We will also discuss the ramifications of not achieving the standards set by the Department of Health and Human Services of the FDA in terms of the dairy operation and human and animal health. Examples will be provided, and students will have the opportunity to engage in group discussions.
